The Festival of Britain

In 1951, during the Festival of Britain, the British Pullman train was used to transport visitors between London and the festival site on the South Bank of the Thames. Among the carriages used were Cygnus, Perseus, and Minerva, providing a comfortable way for people to travel to the various events and exhibitions taking place during the festival, which celebrated British culture and achievements in the post-war era.

One of the highlights of the festival was the Pleasure Gardens, an amusement park-style area featuring a wide range of attractions, including a miniature railway, a funfair, and a water chute. The Pleasure Gardens offered a fun and exciting escape from the serious tone of the rest of the festival and proved to be extremely popular with visitors.
